EXECUTIVE NOTES

HOMES & ESTATES MAGAZINE

Charlie Young

CEO

As we move into the final quarter of 2017, I am reminded of a quote from Heraclitus: "The only thing that is constant is change." Change can be positive. Change helps us grow. Change inspires us to be more flexible, too. For example, increased globalization and changes in the way affluent homeowners search for real estate inspired the Coldwell Banker® brand to completely re-envision our global luxury marketing platform this year. We've invested substantial resources and time to create more opportunities for our global affiliates all over the world — so the exchange of ideas and the sharing of knowledge flow more freely among all those who work under the banner of the Coldwell Banker Global LuxurySM program. From Paris to Turkey, the response has been overwhelming. Luxury agents are quickly folding the new brand identity into their marketing efforts and have shown a renewed sense of excitement about the future.

Over the last few months, there has been a rise in the number of luxury home sales. While many factors contribute to any market change, the willingness of high-net-worth individuals to adjust their price expectations is a likely part of the equation. Affluent consumers are very savvy, and they react and adapt quickly to market shifts. We also continue to see luxury activity in non-core luxury markets. In Europe, we are seeing the emergence of Portugal, Spain and Italy in luxury. In the United States, we are seeing strong luxury real estate growth in the Texas markets like Dallas, and also in Seattle, Washington. It's a reminder that diversification is always key to a strong and healthy market.

With change comes enormous opportunity. The Coldwell Banker Global LuxurySM program — with its global connections and inspired marketing — is poised to help Luxury Property Specialists realize the goals of their clients in the ever-changing high-end market.

Craig Hogan

VICE PRESIDENT OF LUXURY

Rarity is one of the most powerful indicators of luxury. If you possess something that is rare — desired by many and attained by few — it is a signifier of your wealth and your status. It could be a home. It could be a piece of art. It could be a $1,500 bottle of bourbon. Homes & Estates pays homage to rarity in so many ways. Just look at our ticketed dining feature, covering some of the world's most exclusive and hard-to-get-into culinary experiences. There's also "The Last Word...", which covers my favorite topic of all — the rarest of the rare bourbons and whiskeys. (If anyone can find Pappy Van Winkle's Family Reserve 20-Year, you will be in my good graces forever!) And, of course, there are the many dreamy, one-of-a-kind properties featured throughout the magazine's 208 pages.

It's a rare thing to find all of this luxury in one place — and yet that is exactly what we have accomplished. The fall 2017 issue marks our fourth publication of 2017 and completes our first full year under the direction of our new partnership between the Coldwell Banker Global LuxurySM program and Unique Homes. The seven property editorials and seven lifestyle features really showcase our presence in the highest sectors of the marketplace. Whether you are a collector of fine wine or fine homes, we have created something truly unique for high-net-worth individuals and their real estate agents everywhere. Our global distribution now includes first-class departure lounges at airports, as well as direct delivery to the wealthiest homebuyers and sellers in the country. I should also mention that we place the magazine in thousands of Coldwell Banker® offices worldwide to integrate into their international marketing outreach programs. After my European tour this summer, I can tell you that they are already sharing the new Coldwell Banker Global Luxury identity with their international audiences in some new and exciting ways, including marketing partnerships with some of the top luxury auto brands (read our blog to find out who). Their efforts underscore the important intersection between real estate and lifestyle that continues to power modern luxury marketing today.

This brings me back to rarity. Coldwell Banker itself is a rare brand. We celebrated our 111th birthday this year. What other real estate brand has that kind of longevity and heritage? Just the fact that we're still here, living and leading, is a luxury.

A HOME IN ITS LANDSCAPE

BY KELLY POTTS

With stonework and natural accents found inside and out, the home at 109 Willoughby Way in Aspen, Colorado blends seamlessly into its wooded, mountainous site at the bottom of Red Mountain. The property, featuring 6 bedrooms and 6 full and 4 half baths, is just a short walk or bike ride into town, but offers seclusion and privacy in a prime location.

"This is probably the most coveted location in Aspen," says listing agent Carrie Wells of Coldwell Banker Mason Morse, "It's very close to the center of town, yet you have almost two and a half acres of land and views looking directly at Aspen Mountain."

The location, however, did create some challenges for architects Bill Poss and Andy Wisnoski of Poss Architecture + Planning and Interior Design during the building of the home. “The area was narrow in width and on a steep site with a 30 percent slope,” says Wisnoski. “It presented some interesting challenges on how to design a home that would take advantage of those spectacular views of Aspen Mountain and work on a fairly steep hillside.”

Poss and Wisnoski remedied this by adding in elements inspired by the landscape, including stone accents and waterfalls, to design a home that appears as though the site itself created it. “When you look at the stonework on the base of this property, the home grows out of the site,” Wisnoski says. “It’s a sensitive way of placing the home in its landscape.”

The natural elements featured on the exterior of the home were also carried into the interior. “We used a lot of the same stone on the inside as we did on the outside,” Poss says of the accents in each room, including a stunning stone fireplace in the living room and dry-stacked stone interior walls that blend seamlessly with high-quality, wraparound windows.

“One of the notable things about the house is all the windows,” says Wells, stating that the windows in each room allow for breathtaking views of the mountains and water features. From the living room, one can enjoy spectacular views of Aspen Mountain beyond a pond large enough for canoeing or stand-up paddle boarding that is situated in the front of the home.

“It’s a legacy property,” says Poss, “it’s a classic piece of mountain modern architecture in Aspen in a truly amazing location that feels secluded, but in reality it’s within a mile from town.” Poss and Wisnoski note that this property offers the true indoor-outdoor lifestyle that a lot of people desire in Aspen today.

Wells believes that this residence is perfect for a multi-generational family or someone who enjoys having guests over often. She says, “You can enjoy the lifestyle of Aspen, the perfect location, acreage, privacy, views and all the amenities that Aspen has to offer.”

THE ULTIMATE

One of the benefits of the Coldwell Banker Global LuxurySM program's partnership with Unique Homes, is that the editors at Unique Homes make it their business to track the luxury real estate market. Once a year, they compile Ultimate Homes, a comprehensive list of each home for sale in the United States for $25 million or more. The latest data illustrates intriguing trends in the uber-luxury world.

The Boom in Ultimate Homes

Unique Homes started consistently tracking “Ultimate Homes” in 2004. At that time, there were 137 properties for sale at $19 million or more (roughly the equivalent to $25 million today). Today that number is 406, three times the number of properties for sale at this level as there were 13 years ago.

That’s the number of states where you can find properties of $25 million or more. Ultimate Homes can be found in the likes of Idaho, Indiana, Montana and South Carolina, where the historic Buckfield plantation was listed for more than $50 million.

©ISTOCKPHOTO.COM / AMEDVED

Prefer the mountains?

When it comes to Ultimate Homes, Aspen, Colorado is the most represented city that is not on the East or West Coast. It boasts 19 properties listed from $25 million to $80 million, totaling more than $670 million — a sharp increase from the nine listings in that range the previous year.

The Big Three

New York, California and Florida have held the lion’s share of the ultra-luxury properties in the U.S. since we started keeping track. In fact, there is very little change year-to-year in that dynamic:

In 2017, out of the 406 properties listed at $25 million or more:

- 149 were in New York State (37%)
- 108 were in California (27%)
- 59 were in Florida (15%)

78% of the list consisted of properties in those three states.

25% of the list consisted of properties in New York City (101 of them)

Data and statistics used in The Ultimate Trends have been provided by duPont Publishing Inc., dba Unique Homes. Coldwell Banker Real Estate LLC does not accept any responsibility or liability for the accuracy, content, completeness, legality, or reliability of the information.

TRENDS

New York City's Rise

The continued rise of New York City's prominence in the ultra-luxury tier is another significant change. In 2004, New York State had 21% of the most expensive properties, with the city representing 15% — compare that to 37% and 25% respectively, today.

Wild West

When Unique Homes ranks its top properties, land listings aren't included. A property must have a significant luxury home. That being said, the state of Wyoming still appeared on the 2017 Ultimate Homes list five times, including the $69 million Spring Gulch Ranch, an historic 162-acre quiet paradise 10 minutes from downtown Jackson. The majestic Grand Teton National Park is nearly at its doorstep.

©ISTOCKPHOTO.COM / FRANKPETERS

But What Goes Up...

Much of New York City's growth in Ultimate Homes has centered about Billionaire's Row, a group of high-end towers clustered along the southern edge of Central Park in Manhattan. But experts now fear the city's ultra-high-end market has been oversaturated, and just this year two apartments in One57 at 157 W. 57th Street have gone to foreclosure. According to reports, a 56th-floor apartment purchased in July 2015 for $21.4 million was slated for auction after the owners defaulted on a $20.9 million loan. And a Nigerian oil tycoon who purchased a full-floor penthouse for $50.9 million in December 2014 defaulted on a $35.3 million mortgage.

$350 Million Estate Offered in Bel Air

Coldwell Banker Global Luxury is one of the programs marketing the iconic estate known as "Chartwell." The crown jewel of Bel Air in Los Angeles, California, it totals more than 10.3 acres in one of the nation's most coveted and elite enclaves.

the Golden Ticket

BY DRESDEN SCOTT

BLURRING THE LINE BETWEEN FINE DINING AND ENTERTAINMENT, RESTAURANTS JUMP ON THE TICKETING TRAIN TO CREATE HIGH-CONCEPT CULINARY EXPERIENCES.

Forget slipping the maître d' a $100 bill to snag a table at Eleven Madison Park, or calls to The French Laundry, asking the hostess to pull strings to seat your party of VIPs at the highly coveted 7:00 p.m. time slot. Increasingly, the world's most progressive restaurants are offering ticketed food journeys and ditching the old trusted standby: reservations.

"What I think is driving ticketed dining is the emphasis on creating an experience within a restaurant," says Elyse Inamine, Food & Wine's associate restaurant editor. "Food can be transportive, and chefs are tapping into that."

Inamine notes that chefs are investing in all facets of the restaurant, from sourcing specific ingredients to building more elaborate spaces and designing staff uniforms. It's only natural that they would want to exert more control over the experience they offer their patrons, too. For restaurants, it means fewer last-minute cancellations. For diners, the ticket phenomenon means they must pay up front, but it also encourages them to carve out time on their calendars and requires them to be present for the experience, "which is a huge shift from our screen-guided, Facebook event-maybe-marked way of living," says Inamine.

Nick Kokonas, the Chicago-based co-founder of Alinea and Next, and the founder of Tock — the online restaurant ticketing system — sees it another way. Ticketing also allows the restaurant to deliver consistency each night, and often to a small number of diners. "When demand outstrips supply at a restaurant or a restaurant is very small, then offering a prepaid option helps streamline operations and improve hospitality," he says.

Dozens of buzzed-about eateries have jumped on the ticket train — from Barcelona's highly experimental, theatrical Enigma (which requires a secret code to get in) to unique operations like Lume in Melbourne, Australia, and Portland's Farm Spirit (which has only 16 seats). Newcomers like Washington, D.C.'s The Shaw Bijou from Top Chef competitor Kwame Onwuachi and L.A. chef Jordan Kahn's daring Vespertine

Enigma

Barcelona, Spain

Enigma is the latest concept from Ferran and Albert Adrià, the legendary Spanish brothers behind elBulli who practically coined the term “molecular gastronomy.” Only 28 diners per night maze through six different areas in one giant, cloud-like space, experiencing a dazzling sequence of one-biters and mini cocktails.

Vibe: High-tech cathedral.

Order: €220 for a 40-course tasting menu.

Taste: Squid cut to mimic sushi rice, ring of nori topped with Schrenki caviar, a quasi-reverse grilled cheese on steamed saffron brioche soaked in Parmesan “serum” and wrapped in melted, grated Parmesan.

Aska

Williamsburg, Brooklyn

Run by Swedish chef Fredrik Berselius, this Michelin 2-star Brooklyn restaurant may only consist of 10 tables — but it takes diners on a larger-than-life “culinary journey of Scandinavian flavors and techniques” through seasonal tasting menus.

Vibe: Goth meets art house in a restored 1860s warehouse building.

Order: 10-course menu, $175 per person, or 19-course menu, $250 per person. Service is included.

Taste: Swedish pancakes with salted beef, farmer’s cheese, and dill, puffs of flash-fried lichen poured with mushroom broth, sorbets flavored with birch bark or wild strawberries.

Pineapple and Pearls

Washington, D.C.

As the sister restaurant to Rose’s Luxury, Chef Aaron Silverman’s Pineapple and Pearls is already making a splash on Capitol Hill with his elegantly inspired tasting menu. The highly anticipated eatery already earned a coveted spot on Bon Appetit’s “Best New Restaurants” list, and earned praise from the Washingtonian as D.C.’s “Best Restaurant.”

Vibe: A banker’s dining room, touched with modern art in Culver City are skipping over reservations completely and going the prepaid route. Even stalwarts like New York’s Eleven Madison Park and Thomas Keller’s The French Laundry moved to prepaid reservations.

Restaurants aren’t the only tasteful tickets in town, either. There are pop-up experiences — like analog in Atlanta, a multicourse collaborative dining series from chefs Todd Richards and Guy Wong, and beverages of Jerry and Krista Slater — and hybrid events that combine eating with cooking demos from stars like Top Chef alum Paul Qui’s “Art of Crudo” at Pao inside the Faena Hotel Miami Beach and Chef Vinson Petrillo’s cooking classes at Charleston’s celebrated Zero Restaurant + Bar. This summer, Napa Valley’s Michael Chiarello launched Teatro Bistecca, which touts itself as an “18-karat evening of glamour, merriment and food” in a modern twist on classic dinner theater for $125 per person. Even the Michelin Guide features rare collaborations with top chefs who serve guests in locations ranging from restaurants to unexpected settings in cities like San Francisco and Miami. Alinea

Chicago, Illinois

Fun, emotional, provocative. These are three words that describe the modernist dining experience at Chicago’s Alinea — named to the “Best Restaurant in America” list four times and one of only 13 restaurants in the United States to earn the coveted Michelin 3-star rating. Headed by Chef Grant Achatz, the Lincoln Park restaurant now features three unique and distinct experiences: The Gallery, The Salons and the Kitchen Table.

Vibe: Bright, airy and sophisticated.

Order: The completely private Alinea Kitchen Table tasting, $385 per person (for parties of six only); 16- to 18-course menu, $285 to $355 per person in the first-floor gallery; 10- to 14-course menu, $175 to $255 per person in the salon.

Taste: Expect the unexpected, whether it’s a green apple helium balloon that floats past your table or a milk chocolate, pâte sucrée, violet and hazelnut dish served à la Jackson Pollock.

Trois Mec

Los Angeles, California

Trois Mec, which loosely translates to “three guys,” is the vision of Ludo Lefebvre, in conjunction with partners Jon Shook and Vinny Dotolo (of Animal, Son of a Gun, and Jon & Vinny’s). Since opening in June 2013 in an old pizza parlor in a strip mall, the trio has consistently delivered a changing five-course tasting menu that continues to earn praise among critics from the Los Angeles Times, LA Weekly and Food & Wine.

Vibe: Unpretentious yet chic — with a side of French hip hop.

Order: Five-course menu, $95 per person.

Taste: The menu is set by the chef each night, but a sampling of dishes may include potato pulp with browned butter and bonito flakes, foie gras beignets, mustard crème brûlée or buckwheat “popcorn.” Add supplemental courses if you can.

The Clove Club London, England

The Clove Club opened in March 2013 in East London's of-the-moment Shoreditch district, and quickly established itself as a vanguard of the new UK dining scene, climbing to No. 2 in the UK and No. 26 in the "World's Best Restaurant" lists, as well as gaining a Michelin star. The restaurant is known for its good food, personable service and comfortable atmosphere.

Vibe: Elegantly rustic.

Order: Tasting menu, £110 per person plus supplements in the main dining room, £75 to £110 per person in front room and £75 per person at the countertop, Monday through Thursday.

Taste: Chef Isaac McHale's obsessively sourced ingredients can range from hand-dived Orkney scallops to Barbary duck, dry-aged onsite for 21 days.

Atelier Crenn San Francisco, California

Michelin-starred Dominique Crenn sets the tone at her tiny eight-table Cow Hollow restaurant with an original poem, which loosely corresponds to the avante-garde dishes that are her hallmark. Atelier Crenn promises "a gastronomic discovery inspired by sustainable and seasonal cuisine," or as Crenn herself calls it: "poetic culinaria."

Vibe: Elegant simplicity.

Order: Chef Crenn's multi-course tasting menu, $325 per person plus supplements.

Taste: Crenn's food is poetic and experimental, so expect metaphorical-sounding dishes with names like "Sitting on top of the dune, feeling of beach sand under my toes." The menu is seafood-driven with everything from shellfish and uni to trout marmitako, but don't be surprised if sweetbreads, bone marrow, pork belly and wagyu tartare make their appearance.

ernst Berlin, Germany

The intimate dining experience at ernst in Wedding — one of Berlin's hottest neighborhoods — focuses on "sourcing the best produce from Berlin and the surrounding region," according to the 12-seat restaurant's website. During the three- to four-hour experience, patrons will hear stories of local farmers, winemakers and craftspeople who helped shape the direction of the restaurant.

Vibe: Urban farmhouse modern.

U.P. at Dominique Ansel Kitchen in New York's West Village or the semi-secret SF Champagne Society's champagne lounge in San Francisco's SOMA district.

"Prepaid and deposit reservations are only part of the equation," explains Kokonas. "The real magic of Tock is offering unique culinary experiences right next to ordinary free reservations. By doing so, a restaurant, winery or even a gallery can let customers know about all of the offerings it may have — whether it's chef's tables, wine tastings or pop-up dinners — prior to dining. Diners love this. Instead of being up-sold at the restaurant, they can plan ahead for something truly special."

With the explosion of Tock, both Kokonas and Inamine predict more and more chefs will embrace the idea of ticketed dining experiences. Since debuting in 2014, Tock has already grown to include over 400,000 diner accounts and offers more than 500 different unique culinary experiences in 51 cities around the world. The online platform had 34,300 purchases, seating nearly 150,000 people in one month alone. But can a night at a restaurant really be treated the same as a night at the theater? So far, the answer — from even the savviest of diners — has been: "Where do I sign up?"

Hong Kong

Okra Bar is a hidden sushi bar above Okra Kitchen in Hong Kong's fish market neighborhood of Sai Ying Pun, serving only handmade and carefully sourced ingredients and an extensive selection of sakes. New Orleans-born Chef Max Levy is known for his unique blend of Gohyakumangoku sake rice and Koshihikari rice, which is aged for one year and milled significantly less than other restaurants to preserve the natural flavor. Fish and seafood are also sourced from a variety of locales, with a strong significance placed on Fukuoka, Taiwan and Hong Kong.

Vibe: Buzzy Izakaya feel.

Order: The Omakase Experience for two to eight guests at HK$1,200 per person plus supplements.

The Fat Duck
Bray, England

The Michelin 3-star restaurant has given the world such delicacies as snail porridge and bacon and egg ice cream — and in the process, has consistently ranked among the world's best restaurants. Since 1995, Chef Heston Blumenthal's Berkshire village restaurant in Bray has advanced the craft of cooking while sparking a sense of memory and adventure in his patrons.

Vibe: Authentic country pub.

Order: The Journey, for two to six guests, £265 to £275 per person.

Taste: You will get a map (as opposed to a menu) before you embark on a trip designed to trigger childhood memories. To be certain, nothing is as it seems. Two standouts: the Counting Sheep dish and The Sound of the Sea — a small plate of sashimi, served on a glass-covered box of "sand" and accompanied by a seashell, concealing an iPod that plays the sound of crashing waves.

Villa Solana

BY SAMANTHA MYERS

ON THE ISLAND OF SARDINIA, THIS HOUSE ENJOYS A HILLTOP LOCATION ALONG ITALY'S EMERALD COAST.

Emerald-green seawater. Pristine white-sand beaches. The untouched nature of crystalline granite and craggy hilltops. Costa Smeralda, translated to Emerald Coast, off the Italian island of Sardinia is one of the most beautiful coasts in the world. This once-rural, turned-luxurious Mediterranean seaboard is the picture-perfect place to holiday.

"The area and the villas of the Emerald Coast have a high level of luxury that is admired by all the richest in the world. Top luxury villas, luxury yachts, luxury private aircrafts — these are just small indications of what the Emerald Coast is," says Paolo Costi and Pitturru Rosanna, listing agents for Villa Solana, a 1,300-square-meter villa for sale in Porto Cervo, a seaside resort core to the coast's exorbitant lifestyle.

Up until the 1960s, Costa Smeralda was entirely deserted. That is, until a group of entrepreneurs and wealthy families, most notably Prince Karim Aga Khan, implemented their vision of paradise. Now, it's one of most expensive vacation locations in Europe, and even the world — a yachtsman's utopia, jet-setter's dream and a billionaire's playground.

Despite its place in the world of luxury tourism, because of strict regulations, the developments of Costa Smeralda have not disrupted its original landscape. Instead, they have paid architectural homage to it. The exclusive residence of Villa Solana, perched on the hills of Miata, has followed this trend.

Described as being “suspended between sea and sky,” the home offers unmatched panoramic views that extend to the beaches of Liscia di Vacca, across the turquoise lagoons and rugged setting of La Maddalena archipelago, all the way to the distant snowy mountains of the neighboring French island Corsica.

“A portion of Villa Solana was originally an ancient house that in Sardinian was called ‘stazzu,’” says Costi. “They are typically simple houses and built with an agricultural logic that inspired the architects of the Emerald Coast. Particularly, this area was recounted from the past as a magical area where people lived longer and seldom felt ill.”

While the design of the home preserves some of the typical features of Sardinian architecture, especially the exterior, the inside has upset some of the local classic canons with a new contemporary style. The original “stazzu” has been completely renovated, but consists of authentic elements such as original Florentine Cotto tile floor from the 1700s.

Broken up into three sea-facing corridors, the home is organized around another feature point of the property: the pool. Created with principles of feng shui, the all-marble pool flows from the inside of the home, to the outside, where granite sculptures enclose its edges. “With a clear separation between master bedroom, family area and guest accommodations, this is a new idea in space distribution that better suits the concept of a luxury villa,” says Costi.

Other details to marvel at is the entrance of the home and the strips of marble paving that weave around the property and converge in the center hall at the arabesque marble fireplace. Whether cooling off in the air-conditioned contemporary interior, or sunbathing in the heated pool, the prospective owner of Villa Solana should know one thing: views of the Emerald Coast will never leave you.

English Pastoral

BY ALYSON PITARRE

A STately MANOR NESTED IN WESTCHESTER COUNTY CAPTIVATES WITH POETIC VIEWS AND THE PROMISE OF A STILLER LIFE.

Verdant farmland and hillsides dotted by historic bridges, country inns, golf courses, equestrian trails and legacy mansions left behind by the Rockefellers, Vanderbilts, Astors and Vanderlips paint a romantic if not poetic picture of life in New York's Hudson Valley. The craggy peaks of the Palisades dip into cascading valleys where lush forests and the sparkle of the Hudson River serve as a palette for living art.

It was this bucolic setting in Westchester County that inspired Megan and Meriwether "Sambo" Lewis to settle in the Scarborough area of Briarcliff Manor, after nearly a decade living in England. Thanks to connections at the Sleepy Hollow Country Club, the couple heard that a 2.1-acre property within the club's gated grounds was for sale. They saw great potential in the land. The privacy and sweeping scale of its geography — which overlooked beautiful parkland and the river — would make a perfect family home. Its dreamlike treetop setting gave the family inspiration for the home's namesake, "The Aerie."

"Between the bowl of trees below the house, there is this wonderful aviary playground and breeding space," describes Sambo. "We have often witnessed birds chasing off predatory species, bird fights, swifts playing in the drafts and hawks nesting in nearby treetops."

They enlisted local architect Rad Opacic to help them design their pastoral dream. Opacic envisioned a five-bedroom English manor sited to maximize the views. Working closely with Opacic, Megan endeavored to create a home that was simultaneously elegant yet relaxed, "with all the amenities for gracious, active living," she says. They developed a layout that was "easy and comfortable" and made the most of the home's heightened position. You immediately sense their reverence for their surroundings when you enter the front door. A limestone-tiled foyer leads you through archways to a two-story circular gallery with floor-to-ceiling windows, framing the property's gently sloping grounds and, in the distance, the glistening river.

Most rooms have French doors leading to mahogany decks, balconies and patio spaces — all capturing glimpses of the colorful gardens and lush woods below. Even the kitchen, with its raised granite eat-in bar and cherrywood see-through cabinets, was designed with natural light and an outdoor connection in mind. Other light-filled public spaces feel voluminous yet warm with soaring ceilings and grand fireplaces, creating an ideal backdrop for entertaining. The fireplaces throughout the house — four in all — provide the family with both warmth and visual delight during social gatherings.

"The relationship of the family room fireplace to the living room fireplace is really special," says Megan. "When they are lit, you can see both while standing in either room or on the deck."

Up the dramatic circular staircase, there is an exquisite third-floor en suite bedroom, which the Lewises use as a private, quiet getaway for their frequent guests, who enjoy the glass doors opening up to the balcony and dramatic views of the Palisades and the river.

A 1,900-square-foot finished lower level was another brilliant addition. Featuring a separate entrance, this unique space offers privacy and flexibility for out-of-town guests — or may even double as an in-law suite or nanny/au pair apartment. An entertainment room, complete with a full bar, wine cellar, fitness area and patio areas, is also ideal for hosting small and large groups.

"In the winter, we'd come out with hot toddies, cocoa and liqueurs from the bar, and we'd sit in our deck chairs around the roaring fire," remembers Megan. "It was just the place to warm up and have a snack for hungry guests. And, of course, this was also a summer long afternoon and evening meeting place."

Beyond the thoughtful room appointments, Megan and Opacic sought to create an atmosphere of timeless elegance by applying an extraordinary amount of detail to the interiors — expressed in the craftsmanship, artistry and meticulous selection of materials. England once again served as style inspiration, reflected in the stucco work, slate roof and secret nooks and crannies, like the concealed wet bar and the hidden passageway from the living room to the library/study. The design earned the 2002 AIA Design Award for the Westchester and Hudson Valley Chapter — one of many treasures that will be passed on to the next homeowner as the Lewis family prepares to sell the home.

As listing agent Daniel Bucci of Coldwell Banker Residential Brokerage concludes, "This is Hudson Valley living at its finest: blissfully private, refined and comfortable. It is located just two miles from the Scarborough-on-Hudson Metro North station and only 45 minutes from New York City, making it a great primary residence, seasonal retreat or weekend refuge."

The idea that contemporary designs are solely hard-edged minimalistic glass boxes, as pristine as an art museum, is being revised by new expressions of the aesthetic tempered by climate, cultural preferences and changing lifestyle expectations. In fact, emerging contemporary design is likely to choreograph a convergence of hard and soft materials, hot and cold elements.

More than Glass Boxes

“There is a new minimalism now, and I think it is more relaxed and more organic in nature,” says Philadelphia designer Michele Plachter, whose practice includes new urban residences as well as historical classics.

“There is warm contemporary design that is comfortable and easy, but still with clean lines and bold materials. A contemporary home in the mountains will look different than a contemporary home on the beach — but the principles of clean lines and strong materials transfer to any location,” observes San Francisco designer Jay Jeffers.

“The misconception is that contemporary is very minimal. That's one aspect of the style, but there is a whole spectrum to this too," says Mark Mantione, vice president of sales and marketing for Merritt, a firm specializing in luxurious custom finishes. Still, he says, "It's hard to get that hard-edged minimal Scandinavian look out of people's minds."

BY CAMILLA MCLAUGHLIN

"Modern architecture is booming in Philadelphia. If asked to do a new-construction, I tend to look for ways to warm it up," explains Plachter. "I look for antique pieces to bring an element of soul to a newer space. Even if staying in a monochromatic color scheme, I will bring more organic textures."

Not only is the popular perception of contemporary design being challenged, but even the interpretation of the term is up for debate. "Contemporary in the world of design has many meanings. To me, it is of the moment or current," says Jeffers.

Some see contemporary as part of a style evolution that begins with traditional or classic. And rather than a reference to design during a specific period, many believe modern plays into the concept of an abstraction of form and space. Frequently, the two terms are used interchangeably. Yet, no matter how the concept is framed or defined, both modern and contemporary are becoming preferred styles in many regions of the country.

Crazy For Contemporary

"It started in certain markets with open living spaces, a lot of glass, outdoor living, flat roofs and then caught fire in California. Initially, it was more of a coastal trend, but over the last couple of years I have seen it from North Carolina to Seattle," says Danny Hertzberg, who, as a member of The Jills team at Coldwell Banker Residential Real Estate in Miami, witnessed first-hand the incubation of the style following the recession. "In the last five years, contemporary has become a major, major trend, and it's one of those housing trends that's going to be here for a long time," he adds.

In spite of the number of architects with international acclaim who gravitated to Miami, Hertzberg believes the trend is consumer driven, sparked by demand from younger home buyers. "Now we are seeing it in all age groups, and not just from the ultra high-end consumers," he says. "We're seeing it in $1 million properties and $600,000 and $700,000 properties."

This is a dramatic change for an aesthetic formerly the sole provenance of notable architects commissioned to design properties at the highest price points.

Now, innovative contemporary styles are filtering down to all aspects of residential architecture as consumers become more conscious of architecture and the possibilities that emerge from good design, explains architect Steven Dewan, senior principal at Bassenian Lagoni in Newport Beach, California. "We have just entered into a period where the looks of homes are changing. There is an attitude that something different is desirable again," he says.

"In Chicago, there is a strong preference toward a modern aesthetic. There is more glass, more open flowing spaces and clean lines," says Jennifer Ames, with Coldwell Banker Residential Brokerage in Chicago. "And for some people, modern is about energy efficiency. People are mindful of how they want to live and question if a home fits with their value system, and for many, the modern aesthetic is more in line with their values."

"Contemporary has taken over the spotlight for home sales," says Tony Sutton, owner of Est Est Inc., an interior design firm in Scottsdale, Arizona. "It used to be 10 to 15 percent of the business. It is now easily 70 percent of the business.”

Hertzberg agrees, regarding Miami real estate, “Nine out of 10 calls we get are for modern.”

Like many other markets in California, the shift in design preferences in the last decade in Malibu has been toward contemporary. “If it’s a good contemporary, built in the last 10 years, it will sell very quickly. If it’s brand new construction with lots of glass and big open spaces with an infinity pool, it will sell even faster and for top dollar,” says Sandro Dazzan, with Coldwell Banker Residential Brokerage’s Malibu Colony office.

Particularly in-demand are single-level contemporaries, where living spaces stretch across one floor, and the basement is devoted to other amenity spaces, such as media rooms. Because Malibu zoning uses a formula based on the lot size to determine allowable square footage, Dazzan says capturing that additional space on the lower level is prized. Compared to West Hollywood and Beverly Hills, the contemporary look here tends to be warmer, using materials such as wood to play into the beach atmosphere.

Mixing Classic with Current

The combination of traditional facades with modern interiors is another expression of contemporary design and is often found in cities such as Chicago, Philadelphia or even in Aspen, where you could find a Victorian with a gutted modern interior.

“Modern architecture opens up. It takes small spaces and makes them look larger because you are combining rooms and maximizing glazing. Maximizing light and transparency by default creates a larger feeling home,” says Dewan.

“Modern is about floor plan, it’s about flow, it’s about light,” says Ames. In Chicago, renovated properties often mix classic façades with contemporary, updated interiors. There is value in the original exterior, since the footprint often allows for a larger house.

“Because of the number of historic homes in Philadelphia, many clients reach out because they love the historic bones of the home, but they are looking to create a new, more modern look in those homes,” says Plachter.

Strict zoning and little land for new development in Aspen promotes renovations of properties in town. Contemporary works well for smaller condos built during the 1970s, says Brian Hazen, vice president of Coldwell Banker Mason Morse in Aspen. “It feels bigger, more spacious and is a much cleaner look and lends itself well to smaller spaces.”

Mountain Modern

“Contemporary is absolutely big here, and we’re seeing it in a few different ways,” shares Pamela Colesworthy with Coldwell Banker Distinctive Properties in Ketchum, Idaho. “Some homeowners are building new, and they want ultra contemporary, but the bigger trend is what I call Mountain Modern. It’s taking the rustic materials that are representative of the environment — barn siding, corrugated metal and stone — but doing it in a very clean way and just giving it that contemporary twist.”

For newcomers to Sun Valley, Mountain Modern is also a preferred style. Colesworthy explains: “During the downturn, building stopped, so the inventory of what’s for sale is a bit dated and the trend the last five to 10 years has been toward Mountain Modern. So, people are building. Lot sales are way up. If people can’t find exactly what they want, they are building new or doing a significant remodel.”

“Log-accented and post and beam styles are not nearly as popular as they used to be,” Hazen says, “but I think it’s a cycle. If you get too much steel and glass, it is too sterile. Contemporary designs that work the best still incorporate a lot of wood, it’s very much a Rocky Mountain look.”

Twenty years ago, log timbers and river rocks were favored materials, and they were also representative of the environment. Now, wood and stone still bring a textural component and connection with nature, but the overall look is more streamlined. Timbers are more refined. Stone is widely used, but the product is often custom fabricated to achieve a specific effect often in flat or dry stack installations.

Transitioning Traditional

In markets where contemporary doesn't dominate, traditional styles and interiors are changing. "Even in houses where people want a more traditional style, it still has a new twist, so it looks different than houses that were built 10 or 15 years ago," says Sutton.

"Clients are moving away from traditional heavy materials, desiring symmetry, indoor-outdoor living with more glass, plain surfaces versus patterned granite, with color added in accessories. Many are travelers/collectors and mix their antiques with the modern and bring in character. With California water shortages etc., cactus/desert plants are replacing boxwoods and style is unique," states Diana Miner with Coldwell Banker Residential Brokerage in Newport Beach.

An indoor-outdoor connection is a modern signature and not restricted to temperate climates. In luxury enclaves surrounding Phoenix, Toni Stewart of Coldwell Banker Residential Brokerage in Scottsdale is seeing new approaches to blending indoor and outdoor spaces using the same or coordinating flooring, a mix of covered and open areas and an equally high level of furnishings outdoors. "It's one consistent look from the great room looking out to the pool," paired with sculptural desert landscaping, she says.

Big windows and telescoping or stacking doors add another dimension. "Modern is about the windows and how it incorporates exterior environment into the living spaces," shares Bruce Birkeland with Coldwell Banker Burnet in Minneapolis, a city with a long tradition of contemporary architecture. For residential properties, he says, "there has been a surge in modern architecture in the last few decades. We have a number of listings that have the timeless quality of the international style." Here, as in other regions, Frank Lloyd Wright's style continues to influence current design.

Still, for the market overall, new homes lean toward a transitional style with cleaner lines and streamlined interiors, observes Ian Peterson also with Coldwell Banker Burnet.

Expect to see contemporary and modern become even more nuanced as the aesthetic evolves. "You can see differences between a house built three years ago and one built in 2017. People are combining teak, stone and wood to soften the design," says Hertzberg.

"There are a lot of contemporary condos and houses with unique paneling — a lot of walnut, walnut dyed and bleached — on the walls and ceiling, but the trim is very minimal." In addition to various woods, contemporary interiors, particularly in the ultra price range, use a range of materials, including leather and metals. "Finishes keep pushing the envelope, and we are constantly experimenting," says Mantione.

By the very nature of being contemporary, it changes, shares Birkeland. "Being current has a lot to do with fit and finish, which changes on a calendar basis. What was current five years ago, isn't current any longer."

Also, what is considered current depends on price. An affordable contemporary might be a prairie design shaped with modern materials and open concept interiors. As it gets more expensive, it becomes more personalized with timely versions of flooring to Calacutta marble finishes. "A classic finish is just that classic with very clean lines with little industrial influence," he says.

Design isn't static. As designers and architects continue to tweak contemporary design, there is a good chance an entirely new style will be created in the process.

FASHION FORWARD

LUXURY HOSPITALITY GETS THE DESIGNER TOUCH.

Suite Coco Chanel Ritz Paris

Coco Chanel walks into the Hotel Ritz Paris. Sounds like the beginning of an eyebrow-raising story, and it is. The year was 1937, she was famously living on Paris' Rue Cambon, and one day she strolled in, booked a suite, and never left. For 34 years.

Little did the fashion icon know that the glamorous yet timeless style she was imbuing into the space by bringing in her own gilded mirrors and lacquered screens (today mixed with restored and replica pieces) would inadvertently help inspire a major hospitality trend decades later. Today, you can book the Coco Chanel Suite. Or, you can experience the growing intersection between fashion and hospitality in luxury hotels around the world, led by names like Bulgari, Fendi, Versace, Armani and soon, Lagerfeld. The iconic designer is opening his first hotel in Macau in 2018.

"The Karl Lagerfeld Hotel will be aspirational, quirky, not take itself too seriously and, above all, provide a series of experiences that are true to Karl Lagerfeld's legendary career and vision going forward," says Tony Kurz, CEO of Brandmark Collective, Karl Lagerfeld's hospitality licensee. "It is a chance for a brand to extend into another space to attract new customers, as well as reach existing customers in another way."

Luxury hotels and fashion houses are increasingly intertwined, with an ever-expanding list of opulent options for travelers. So what's driving the trend? In part, the need to redefine the promise of luxury in a changing world, according to Bjorn Hanson, PhD, clinical professor with the New York University Jonathan M. Tisch Center for Hospitality and Tourism.

"The definition of luxury for hotels has become a challenge. Once upon a time — but not long ago — it was simple for luxury hotels. There was a short list of services, such as turndown service. More and more today, guests are requesting no turndown service. All of a sudden, something that was a staple of luxury service now can be a dissatisfier. Another iconic symbol was concierge; however, that has become less important, especially with millennial travelers, as social media and peer groups can provide the kind of service a concierge once did.

"These brands have an instant and unmistakable connection with luxury," he adds, which provides a new opportunity to connect with high-end travelers. "Even for those who aren't thinking they will buy Versace clothes, the name is a mark of quality and luxury. The perception is that the brand wouldn't be involved with something that isn't truly special."

The name is just the beginning

What sets many of these offerings apart is how they reflect their namesake. If you didn't know Palazzo Versace on Australia's Gold Coast was that Versace, the bounty of Medusa heads on the property might be a tipoff. Ditto for Palazzo Versace Dubai, which showcases the design staple among neoclassical architecture and traditional Arabic architectural details.

Fendi Private Suites, opened in 2016, serves up luxury, exclusivity and a prime setting, with seven upscale hotel rooms perched above the brand's flagship boutique on Rome's tony Via Condotti. Minimalism meets exquisite details at The Armani Hotel Dubai, located in the world's tallest building, the Burj Khalifa, and The Armani Hotel Milano, in Rome's fashion district.

"Many designers or fashion houses see a natural brand extension with hotels. But a first-class experience is more than just hanging your name on a building," says Bruce J. Himmelstein, speaker, consultant, founder of the BJH Group and former Ritz-Carlton executive. "Continuing the success of these luxury partnerships depends not just on the promise of luxury, but the execution. [Before opening their first branded hotel,] Bulgari brought in a professional hotel group. To their credit, they did it right. They reached out to someone who understood consumer needs and had operational know-how."

The joint venture between Bulgari and the Luxury Group, which manages Ritz-Carlton hotels, has produced renowned hotels under the Bulgari name in Milan, London and Bali. The Bulgari Hotel Beijing opened its doors in September as part of an aggressive expansion strategy that also includes Shanghai and Dubai this year, and Moscow in 2019.

"The Bulgari Hotel Beijing is entirely designed by renowned Italian architectural firm Antonio Citterio Patricia Viel and Partners and features not just some of the city's largest guest rooms, but also the Bulgari signature Il Bar; Il Ristorante, curated by Michelin-starred chef Niko Romito; a large Bulgari Spa; and a spacious ballroom," says Bulgari Group Executive Vice President Silvio Ursini. "Bulgari is a jeweler and more connected to the idea of 'hard luxury,' and our hotels are the expression of a brand and its heritage that date back over 125 years."

That type of brand expression and extension only looks to become more prominent as more fashion houses explore their luxury potential outside of couture.

Taking Your Art to the Next Level

BY SAMANTHA MYERS

YOU ADMIRE ART, AND PERHAPS HAVE A FEW FINE PIECES IN YOUR COLLECTION. BUT YOU WANT TO TAKE IT TO THE NEXT LEVEL. WHETHER YOUR INTENTION IS TO INVEST IN ART, OR SIMPLY TO ILLUMINATE THE WALLS OF YOUR HOME, HERE'S SOME ADVICE TO ENHANCE YOUR COLLECTING PROFICIENCY.

HIRE AN ART ADVISOR

Hiring an art advisor or consultant is one of the most secure steps a collector can make. Their job is to make sure you do not make a financial mistake; think of them as your personal art expert, with a mission to find you a piece of art you love and that is a good investment.

"First, I think the concept of quality is one of the most important things for art collectors to understand," says Kati Lovaas, owner of LOVAAS and an experienced art advisor for over 10 years. "Quality transverses all ages, geography and genres. Secondly, I like to get a feel for what clients respond to and what they love regardless of availability and commercial considerations."

Art collector Fred Bidwell and his wife, Laura, have been building their photo-based collection since 1991. While they themselves do not work with an art advisor, because of their experience and knowledge on the subject, Bidwell encourages early collectors to understand it as a great option. "We enjoy being directly engaged with the process of research, learning about the work and, often, developing a personal relationship with the artist," he says. "However, if a collector is interested in buying art as an investment or buying historical work where issues of condition, authenticity and provenance are important, I think an art advisor might provide important expert information and perspective."

"My question is: why wouldn't you hire an art advisor?" asks Lovaas. "The cost is generally made up in that an advisor is usually able to negotiate a better discount that first time for unknown buyers."

Where is the best place to buy art? "It depends on what you are collecting," says Lovaas. “If it’s emerging artists, go to the galleries. If you don’t have time to go to galleries, go to the art fairs. Auction houses often sell fantastic work from undervalued artists.”

And then there is the Internet.

BUYING ONLINE

In recent years, a growing number of online marketplaces and resources to purchase art have emerged. Websites at the forefront of online collecting in the new digital world are making even the most high-end purchases possible for anyone, anywhere, and offering phenomenal educational services that truly can guide collectors throughout the entire process of purchasing artwork.

“Though the art world was once slower to embrace online commerce than other industries, the current online art market is exploding,” says Jacob Pabst, CEO of artnet. “The advantages of buying anything online also apply to art: you have a fast and efficient way to discover, educate yourself, get all the facts, and then transact, all on your own time. You’re able to avoid the often-intimidating traditional settings of galleries and auction houses to connect directly with the art you love.”

Founded in 1989, with a mission of delivering transparency to the art world, artnet has adapted with the demands of a technology-driven society, by providing a multitude of refined resources for collectors and dealers. “It offers everything you need to get started, from open-ended discovery to making your first acquisition,” says Pabst. “We host millions of artworks on our site in every conceivable medium and style, so it’s a matter of exploring our curated selections to begin developing your own taste and finding which artists inspire you.”

Prospective buyers on artnet can make a purchase directly online, or connect with one of thousands of member galleries on the site. “Our Price Database is the world’s most comprehensive archive of auction results in the world, and serves as the industry’s undisputed ‘blue book,’” says Pabst. This database allows users to compare art prices and ascertain if they are getting a fair value.

Another website that offers a platform for art purchases is Artsy — a site that has more than half a million fine art, design and furniture pieces on its site from the most established galleries in the world. Find works from emerging artists, or priced up into the tens of millions. “If you are starting a collection, I recommend identifying your preferences at the outset (for example, artwork dimensions, location of the work, price), and filtering out works on Artsy accordingly,” advises Stas Johnson-Chyzykhov, Artsy’s associate director of collector relations.

After exploring the user-friendly interface and identifying the art that fits your appeal, she then recommends that collectors contact the galleries via their messaging system to ask further questions about the work and the artist. “Artsy allows collectors to make an informed decision not only by exposing them to an unprecedented amount of diverse and high-quality inventory, but also by providing important contextual information about artists such as their resume, exhibition history, auction results and articles,” she says.

Sites like Artsy and artnet are not only making online purchases convenient, but more importantly, are bringing greater digital globalization to the art world. “The average distance between our buyers and sellers is more than 3,000 miles,” says Johnson-Chyzykhov. “While a few years ago, patrons were wary of buying luxury objects sight unseen, these concerns are voiced less frequently now, as collectors have trust in Artsy’s platform, which vets galleries and enables galleries to present their inventory on Artsy accurately.”

Making sight unseen purchases is one of the biggest debates about online marketplaces today, and that goes especially for high-end art-focused marketplaces. While benefits of buying online include convenience and providing a digital breadth of work for sale at a given time, the biggest debate is whether or not it’s still important to see an artwork in person before acquiring it.

While Artsy and artnet are designed to ensure safe online purchases, they both still recognize the digital barrier and internalize a fundamental aspect of art appreciation: it’s important to see art in person, if possible. Thus, both sites promote the face-to-face interaction with artwork, with tools to help create that opportunity for you to connect with gallery owners and sellers to schedule a visit.

Pabst believes that when it comes to seeing work in person, a lot has to do with the artists you are interested in. “For most of the secondary market — which occupies the largest share of the market — you don’t necessarily need to see the work in person,” he says. “Whenever you’re dealing with the well-known, established, and popular artists that have a solid auction history, you can rest assured that you know what you’re getting.” Yet, in other areas of the market, he brings to light the unknowns, and in those cases you should see the art in person.

“While we still suggest viewing a work in person as often as you can, sometimes you’re not able to fly across the world to a gallery in Hong Kong,” acknowledges Johnson-Chyzykhov. “However, when it comes to buying, the majority of collector purchases on Artsy, including works valued above $1 million, are made sight unseen,” she says.

ARTISTS AND MEDIUMS

Emerging Artist, Mid-Career, or Established — these labels are given to artists based on their careers, not ages. What should you buy?

Emerging Artists are new and upcoming artists garnering attention from their local communities. Mid-Career artists have a good number of solo exhibitions under their belt and most likely have a stable following in the art world. Then, there are established artists — also known as “Blue Chip” — who have a distinguishable style and are represented by a well-known gallery.

“It’s exciting to work with young artists at the

“My wife, Laura, and I started collecting photographs in 1991, the year we were married. We were both very interested in photography, and at the time, it seemed very affordable. Pricing has certainly gone up since then and our definition of photography has expanded, but we continue to think that photo-based art is one of the most fascinating fields in Contemporary art,” says Bidwell.

beginning of their careers, but it’s not for the timid if the collector has expectations that the work will stand the test of time,” says Bidwell. “A good place to start is looking at work by mid-career artists; artists who have a track record and are still developing their practice.”

“Look, look and look some more. Do some research. Do not buy the name; buy the piece,” advises Lovaas. “Many great artists have done ‘C’ work. Galleries try to sell the ‘C’ work to unwitting buyers. Pay on time. If you are buying Blue Chip, A+ art, expect to pay for it. Surprisingly, there is a lot of competition at the top!”

“Given that virtually every fine art object is unique and represents the output of the artist’s many years of work, it all has intrinsic value,” says Johnson-Chyzykhov. Because there is worth in a variety of mediums of art in the art world, it is more beneficial to evaluate periods and artists for value.

“To risk averse collectors, I always suggest looking at sure bets — works by established artists such as Cindy Sherman, Yayoi Kusama, David Hockney have a strong and stable market. Beyond that, the secondary market (fine art works that are coming from another collector or dealer rather than straight from the artist studio) poses a great investment opportunity for collectors.”

She recommends finding works, or even prints, multiples from established artists that promise an appreciation over time. Like any investment, there is always a risk, but as long as you understand the market it will likely be worth it.

BUY WHAT YOU LOVE

Another way to not make a mistake when purchasing art is to buy what you love. There’s a clear common denominator when it comes to advice for any collector, new or seasoned.

“Although it’s been said many times before, the most important thing is to buy what you like,” says Bidwell. “That said, it is important that a collector knows why they like something. That means learning something about the career of the artist and understanding what their intentions were in making the work.”

“Buy what you love. It’s almost a cliché, but it’s something you hear a lot for a reason,” agrees Pabst. “Art is something you have to live with and see every day, so make sure when you buy art, you really connect with it.”

THE CRESTWOOD TUDOR SHOWCASES PRIVACY AND PEDIGREE.

Convenient, but not too close. Historic, but not too old. Spacious, but not without character. It's those juxtapositions that often drive the search for the perfect piece of real estate. The ideal location can mean being within easy proximity to work and other area amenities, but does it also offer a serene, private setting? The ideal residence has to have a pedigree, but has it also been updated to modern standards?

Finding that one-in-a-million home that meets all your needs and adds that something extra that also makes your heart beat faster can be incredibly challenging. This is what makes residences like the Crestwood Tudor, a storied, 6,250-square-foot manse in a coveted Northwest Washington, D.C., neighborhood even more rare.

"This is a special property, and not one that is typical for Crestwood, because it is so grand and has been beautifully restored," says listing agent Martin Toews of Coldwell Banker Residential Brokerage and the Martin and Jeff Group. "It's a beautiful English Tudor built in 1923 by the Lansburgh family, founders of the Lansburgh's department stores in D.C., and renovated to its original grandeur with modern standards. It sits high above the street, so you have privacy and great curb appeal."

Crestwood's rich mix of architecture, wooded landscape and a longstanding reputation as a premier, serene enclave in the shadow of downtown makes the location ideal for luxury buyers. It has long been a popular choice among the Washington elite.

"It is a preferred setting for Washington, D.C., homebuyers," says Toews. "There is a large international presence and a number of urban buyers who formerly lived downtown and wanted to be close to the area, but with more space and privacy. It's located minutes to Rock Creek Park and 10 minutes to the White House."

Of course, with so much to offer within the home, the buyer may want to stay even closer to home. Last sold in 2001 to its current owners, the home was meticulously restored, returning its original "mantels and carved moldings, as well as many of the home's original French doors, to their former beauty," he says. "The home originally had more rooms; however, during the renovation, rooms were combined to create an incredible walk-in closet and spa bath in the master suite that added considerably to the home's appeal. Even with removing some rooms to accommodate the new space, the home still has five bedrooms, plus a sitting room and media room on the top floor."

The newly created master bath is an awe-inspiring creation of mosaic tile with an inlaid design, white cabinetry with miles of stone counters, sparkling light fixtures and elegant finishes, and a large walk-in shower. One of the largest undertakings during the renovation was the kitchen, which was customized, modernized and dressed with expansive stone counters, a center island, high-end cabinetry, professional stainless steel appliances and a butler's pantry, in keeping with the expectations of today's luxury buyers.

The kitchen complements the large formal dining room and the handsome office, while two additional special features of the home add to its unique appeal. The brick conservatory is flooded with light through oversized, arched windows and is just a taste of what you'll find beyond the doors. Here, surrounded by mature landscaping and lush greenery, you'd never know you were just minutes from the city. "It's amazing that just a few minutes outside of the downtown area, it can be so quiet," says Toews.

A Revival by Water

BY KRISTEN ORDONEZ

Known for being central to “where design and function flow in concert with the beauty of Longboat Key and Sarasota Bay,” Acqua Vita is a stunning, new construction estate coined as the “Water of Life.” The residence was built “with the idea that today’s buyers are attracted to new construction in the luxury market,” according to Coldwell Banker Residential Real Estate Agent Lynne Koy. “There is not much to choose from that is new over $5 million in the Sarasota/Manatee market,” says Koy, affirming the exclusivity and uniqueness of this residence, which is sure to entice buyers.

Everything in this home, both inside and out, caters to the luxury waterfront lifestyle, never letting you forget the awe of living on the water’s edge. “The architecture takes its interior and exterior cues from the Gulf front estate homes of Palm Beach, but with the Coastal Contemporary feel that is so important to today’s buyers,” Koy notes. Some of these cues exist within the walls of the home, where there is a 24-foot diameter great room with panoramic views of Sarasota Bay, as well as an adjacent wine cellar.

“The entire upper level of the residence contains a stunning master bedroom suite with a luxurious master bath overlooking the bay. The private master study is only steps away from the master bedroom and is uniquely designed to capture the essence of bayfront living,” Koy adds. Both levels offer terraces, which exemplify the Florida lifestyle and free-flowing and easy movement from indoor to outdoor living. Other features include a gazebo with a fireplace, an outdoor kitchen overlooking Sarasota Bay, and a guest bedroom with an outside entry, all with deeded beach access on a nearly 1-acre lot.

Built by Richard Perrone of Perrone Construction and architect Clifford Scholz in 2016, Acqua Vita was reintroduced to the public at a grand opening event in February, where 200 guests attended and brought a sense of rejuvenation into the home.

"This amazing residence not only showcased its elegant design and style, but demonstrated how this home can take on a life of its own," says Koy, "with guests spilling out onto the terraces, moving up the winding stairway to the master level or having conversations by the pool." This liveliness undoubtedly stems from the property's roots in the area of Longboat Key, home to amenities like The Longboat Key Club, which offers golf, tennis and 5 restaurants, as well as a private marina, to its members.

Overall, Koy affirms that those drawn to the home are bound to discover how this property exudes feelings of both serenity and vivacity. "[Buyers] have earned the right to expect the best and they recognize that form and function have created this masterpiece. They have busy lives and they are looking for lifestyle and elegance without the hassle of building," Koy says.

ECO CHAMBERS

THE SUSTAINABLE TOURISM TREND EVOLVES WITH A NEW WAVE OF LUXURY TRAVEL.

BY JAYMI NACIRI

Nekupe Sporting Resort and Retreat

First, a stroll through the gardens, surrounded by hundreds of butterflies and hummingbirds drawn in by native plants. For lunch, a delicacy prepared from local ingredients grown in the organic greenhouse. Afternoon plans: a dip in the solar-heated pool and a guided tour of the resort's certified organic coffee plantation, home to 30 acres of Arabica coffee plants and shaded by a forest that shelters 130 species of birds. Later, a jaunt to the Barva or Irazú volcanoes, just miles away.

This is clearly not your average getaway. However, a stay at a resort like Finca Rosa Blanca Coffee Plantation Resort in Santa Bárbara de Heredia, Costa Rica, is part of a growing movement among luxury travelers seeking a vacation that is as eco-friendly as it is exceptional.

"People coming here want green experiences, but they also want to be pampered and eat great food when they're not out seeing the wild landscape of Costa Rica," says Glenn Jampol, president of the resort and president of the Global Ecotourism Network.

Today's Eco-Luxury Tourism

Isn't eco-tourism for backpackers? That used to be the impression. But, a lot has changed since "lower your footprint" was added to the lexicon.

"When eco-tourism started in the 1980s and 1990s, it was somewhat equated with roughing it. There wasn't a strong realization that you could have luxury and good amenities and sustainability," says Martha Honey, co-founder and executive director of the policy-oriented research organization Center for Responsible Travel (CREST). Resorts like Nekupe Sporting Resort and Retreat, 40 minutes from Granada in Nicaragua, combines the intimacy of a sumptuous eight-room property with a full suite of luxury amenities within a sustainable design. Set on an 1,800-acre protected reserve, the grounds feature more than 14,000 planted trees and an animal sanctuary sustained by reservoirs developed by a local team of ecologists.

Bucuti & Tara Beach Resort in Aruba was developed with a similar sense of balance. "It has been rated both the No. 1 most romantic hotel in the Caribbean by TripAdvisor and the most sustainable hotel in the world in 2016 by Green Globe," says Honey. "They clearly have captured both the high-end leisure market and the sustainability.”

A Subtle Approach

Some luxury travelers specifically seek out resorts that boast an eco-friendly profile. Others may not even be aware of the sustainability because of the way the features have been incorporated, says Stephanie Leavitt, director of sales and marketing at Bardessono Hotel & Spa in Napa Valley, California.

“The beauty of Bardessono is how subtle and simple the design aspects are, presented with a high level of service to create a thoughtful surprise for eco-friendly travel. Great effort went into making the design, experience and decor in line with the hotel’s mindful approach,” she says of features including 100,000 square feet of salvaged wood used throughout; extensive glass that reduces daytime lighting; and an onsite organic garden for preparing meals. “We want to provide guests with a luxurious experience that remains loyal to our environmental values, which have been in place since the very beginning of Bardessono.”

Evolving Beyond Eco-Friendly

“Sustainable tourism is the industry’s current hot-button term, and it incorporates three key pillars,” says Costas Christ, global sustainability strategist for the Virtuoso luxury travel network, and one of the world’s top sustainable tourism experts. “These key pillars are environmentally friendly practices; protection of natural and cultural heritage; and social and economic benefits to local people. The ideas behind sustainable tourism are not a trend; rather, this is an evolution of the global travel and tourism industry that is changing how travel companies operate, how destinations develop tourism and how people choose to go on holiday.”

With 2017 being declared the “International Year of Sustainable Tourism for Development” by the United Nations, “it’s a call to countries around the world to adopt the principles of sustainable tourism,” says Christ. It’s also a call to travelers to embrace microtrends in luxury eco-travel, like “agrotourism, whereby travelers can stay at luxury farm and wine estates that are committed to also protecting nature, and community-based tourism, where travelers can stay with indigenous communities that operate their own lodges, in the process directly supporting local people’s livelihoods and cross-cultural understanding.”

A current hotspot for community-based tourism is Cuba, with people-to-people tours available for Americans who eschew the typical resort experience. “A lot of what is billed as high-end in Cuba is actually generic beach resorts,” said Honey. “Americans have a chance to stay in casas particulares [Spanish for “private houses”] and have a cultural experience in a sustainable, responsible way. Meeting Cubans and sharing ideas through art and music and food — it’s something you wouldn’t otherwise get to do, and it’s also beneficial to Cubans because you’re putting money right into local communities. As travelers, we should be supporting the local economy as much as possible. That’s the future of sustainable tourism.”

Show and Tell

BY DRESDEN SCOTT

THE WINE CELLAR COMES OF AGE, GIVING RISE TO A NEW GENERATION OF WINE ROOMS DESIGNED TO PUT THE BEAUTY OF THE BOTTLE ON FULL DISPLAY.

If you want to know just how much value collectors assign to their wine, then visit them at home. Chances are, they are some of the many modern-day oenophiles who are bringing the residential wine room to the surface.

What was once relegated to ancient caves in Europe and dimly lit underground cellars has now been elevated in the home — sometimes literally. Increasing numbers of affluent homeowners and budding oenophiles are building custom glass-enclosed wine rooms with the express goal of putting their collections on display. Some are opting for large-scale trophy wine rooms that double as entertaining spaces for storing, sipping, dining and sharing with guests. Others are turning to innovative racking solutions that transform bottles into works of art on the wall and pop-up spiral staircases that save space and offer a “wow” moment for guests. And it’s not only wine connoisseurs. Even those who don’t drink wine recognize the resale value and are installing contemporary wine rooms and racking systems in their homes.

“Wine is one of the greatest status symbols,” says Jörn “Joey” Kleinhans, a certified sommelier and founder of Austin, Texas-based The Sommelier Company. “The wine room phenomenon, especially on the West Coast, is about signaling wealth, taste and sophistication. People start building wine cellars and wine rooms in their houses because they know that when they go to sell them later, the houses will be categorized as luxury homes.”

Behind the trend

The rise of the wine room began in the late 1990s and fully took off in the early 2000s. According to the Wine Institute, Americans’ wine consumption has steadily increased for the last 25 consecutive years. As a result, custom wine cellar design has grown from a niche industry catering exclusively to the ultra wealthy into a flourishing multimillion-dollar business appealing to a wider swath of sophisticates.

"The number of homeowners who approach us to design a custom wine room, a wine wall or a wine cabinet has grown each year," says Brooklyn Hurst, vice president of Genuwine Cellars. "As a result, the wine room today is more about showing off your wine. It's allowed us to apply a designer's philosophy to the cellar. From our point of view, a wine room is a work of art."

Through the looking glass

A movement toward contemporary aesthetics is behind heightened demand for glass-enclosed wine structures in many new-build homes. While glass is generally not ideal for aging fine wines, advancements in UV-resistant glass technology, racking systems and temperature- and humidity-control systems have made glass-enclosed wine rooms and wine walls both a practical storage solution and a work of art. In Napa Valley, Cyd Greer of Coldwell Banker Brokers of the Valley has noticed a proliferation of "wine libraries" — where, instead of books, wine is set in "beautifully lighted displays with customized glass fronts viewable from the public rooms." Wine walls are also popular, since they act as visually pleasing room dividers between spaces like the formal dining room and living room.

"Most people are not collectors who are actively tagging, categorizing and aging their wine," says Chris Light of Newport Beach, California-based C.J. Light Associates. "The majority of them want to see their wine and drink their wine, and let their guests enjoy the experience. Wine is like a great painting or a piece of art to them, since many of the bottles have great labels and tell a story. The wine room also brings your personality out in the open, so it is integrated into your life and home."

Unique racking and storage systems

Cable tension storage systems — such as Genuwine's The Ring — are another sought-after feature, since they allow the wine labels to be the real star of the show. "The effect is that the bottles look like they are floating in midair," says Hurst.

Other types of contemporary racking made out of metal, glass and acrylic are highly sought after because they allow homeowners to display their wine in unique and artful ways. Some savvy homeowners are even developing their own custom racking systems to suit their needs. Hurst recalls one client who wanted a two-story Ferris wheel-style conveyor system in his wine cellar — "so he could be on the top floor, hit a button and the conveyer would move up to the room."

Another client requested a motorized spinning device to show off a custom-made 9-liter bottle.

Let there be light

Light may be wine's enemy — but it is an essential element in today's wine rooms. In fact, many architects and design teams work closely with lighting designers to make sure that artistic elements and bottles are accented properly, while also striking the right ambiance in the space. Use of LED lighting — a cooler alternative to traditional incandescent and halogen lights — also allows homeowners to create unique color patterns in their wine rooms. For a 2,000-bottle wine cellar set underneath a pool house in Franklin, Tennessee, designer Jamie Beckwith opted to go high-tech by installing color-changing LED lights, acrylic wine racks and a glass ceiling with retractable blackout shades to protect the wine. She calls the look "TRON cathedral," which matched the Old World Gothic style of the 12,398-square-foot residence.

"We added task lighting so we could see the wine bottles, and under cabinet lighting, as well as some directional lighting," says the owner of Beckwith Interiors. "We quickly realized that as the LEDs moved through the rainbow of colors, we could modify the lighting to create a different mood for parties. There's a festiveness to it."

Places to entertain

Multifunctional entertaining spaces with attached wine rooms have recently emerged as a trend among serious collectors who have large wine portfolios, plus the square footage and financial means to build them.

For a client's mountain refuge in Jackson Hole, Wyoming, Kevin Burke of Carney Logan Burke Architects designed a stunning subterranean space with a wine room that holds over 7,500 bottles in a 55°F and 70-percent relative humidity environment, a tasting area and an entertaining lounge. The expansive space evokes the feeling of a modern wine cave with a wall of stone, while a curvilinear ceiling made of solid mahogany "feels as if you're almost unraveling a large wine cask." A wall-to-wall window of glass extends to the outdoors to grab natural light. The wine itself lives behind a UV-protected glass wall and motorized curtain.

"The owner can set it up so he leads his guests down to this lounge area, and the wine may not be presented yet," says the architect. "With the touch of a button, the curtain retracts to reveal these beautiful racks of wine."

In Dana Point's The Strand At Headlands, Light designed a similar subterranean space, day-lighted to the beach and a dining room with a glass wine wall with temperature barrier as storage. The idea, he says, "was to have guests come to the house, meet and greet in the living room with cocktails and usher them downstairs to the grotto for a special tasting experience, then roll everyone into the theater for entertainment."

Wine galleries with separate cellars for white wine, red wine, Champagne and a walk-in humidor for cigars are also becoming a popular trend among the ultra wealthy. Notes Hurst: "The Galleria of rooms is the billionaire must-have. You can have a collection of cellars holding all that you need and a beautiful tasting area that's in the center as the focal point, tying it all together."

Taking a turn

"To me, the Spiral Cellar is a quintessential example of function meeting form," says Hurst, who notes that Genuwine is the North American representative for U.K.-based Spiral Cellars. "The act of walking over a glass Spiral Cellar is a cool experience. Our clients also love opening a James Bond-style retractable glass door in the floor and walking down under the ground to fetch their bottles."

Developed in 1978 by a Frenchman, the Spiral Cellar system uses the earth to insulate and create optimum storage conditions. Spiral Cellars in Europe use passive ventilation to regulate the temperature, but Genuwine has instituted commercial-grade climate control to the North American version in order to keep the temperature at a cool 55°F. Only recently have Spiral Cellars gained a following in locales like Silicon Valley and Texas.

Capturing the art of living well

The newest generation of wine rooms is a testament to what Plato believed and every oenophile already knows — that fine wine has inherent value, meant to be seen and imbibed in good company. After all, says Kleinhans, "Nothing quite captures the ideal of living and eating well like wine."

Luxury in the Corner Pocket

BY ROGER GRODY

A traditionally themed table from Blatt Billiards is generously embellished in gold leaf.

Billiards has been enjoyed for centuries, and craftsmen have been applying their artistic expressions to it since the game's inception. Catering to luxury homeowners are elite manufacturers who can customize tables to suit any architectural style and transform a game table into a world-class piece of décor.

Brian Maier, owner of Lincoln, Nebraska's Generation Billiards, reports luxury buyers frequently look for tables that reflect their homes' architecture. A timbered villa in Park City or Aspen, for instance, is a good candidate for a rustic log table, while sleek glass tables suit modernist homes with expansive windows. "When people spend $10 million or more for a home, they want a pool table that's just as distinctive," states Maier, whose company can customize any feature of the table. For example, a client may request that the sights (those small inlaid markers along the side rails that are typically made of bone or mother-of-pearl) be replaced with 24-carat gold or diamonds.

Blatt Billiards co-owner Steve Roeder, whose family has operated the venerable New York firm for 70 years, reports that transitional and modern tables now dominate the market, but there is always demand for restorations of antique tables and re-creations of ornately designed vintage pieces. "We're one of the few places that still makes tables old world-style, entirely handcrafted and hand-carved," says Roeder, who reports selling a restored antique pool table for more than $400,000. A traditionally inspired, gold leaf-embellished model is priced at $125,000, and by partnering with marble carvers in Italy — the stone reportedly comes from the same quarries Michelangelo favored — Blatt produces marble tables priced from $50,000.

At Elevate Customs, a Southern California producer of sleek contemporary pool, table tennis and shuffleboard tables, products are customized to clients' whims. Co-owners Lorraine Spektor and Marianna Lummer, sisters with a background in interior design, were convinced of an untapped niche market for luxury game tables. "We wanted to take the industry to the next level, so that the work of high-end interior designers would not be compromised by standard issue tables," explains Spektor, who reports every product is made to order. "Besides our styles and craftsmanship, what sets us apart are the relationships we build, which are personalized at every level," adds Lummer, noting Elevate Customs works closely with customers and designers to achieve the right aesthetics. Currently, the firm is finishing a $68,000 pool table from its Luge series, customized with red suede legs, carbon fiber inlays and discretely placed LED lighting that illuminates both the playing surface and pockets.

Florida's Hurricane Custom Billiards is a high-end manufacturer that creates unique contemporary tables — all built to order, no two are exactly alike — that exhibit a masculine industrial aesthetic and keen attention to detail. Owner Lee Benson, a former architect and furniture designer, states, “A pool table is a gigantic piece of furniture sitting in your room, so it should be a conversation piece as well as a game piece.” The ultimate addition to any man cave is Hurricane’s audacious Force 12 model (base price $42,650), inspired by the engineering found in suspension bridges.

From Australia’s Elite Innovations, a leader in sleek all-glass tables, is the X-1 Everest table, an ultra-modern showpiece priced at $97,000. With its transparent playing surface (a material that replicates the dynamics of traditional felt) and glass supports, it appears to be floating in air and is therefore an ideal complement to contemporary glass-ensconced homes or high-rise penthouses. While the clear surface is stunning without adornment, a luxury dealer like Generation Billiards can customize these tables with family crests, team logos or even photographs.

Wisconsin-based McDermott Cue, which manufactures handcrafted cues featuring intricate inlays of tropical woods, abalone or brass, once produced a hand-engraved, precious metal- and gem-embellished fantasy cue that sold for an astonishing $150,000. More representative of the company’s high-end sticks is its Enhanced 2018 Cue of the Year ($1,999) whose handle includes ornate detailing of maple, abalone, turquoise, and pewter. “Our products stand out because of our materials, the designs we’re able to achieve and our manufacturing capabilities,” says owner Greg Knight.

You can’t shoot pool in the dark, and a contemporary table demands a statement piece to illuminate the playing surface. Designer Kevin Kolanowski of Los Angeles-based Fuse Lighting uses semiprecious stones to give his lighting fixtures extra aesthetic wattage. His Cambridge chandelier (starting at $10,000) is designed specifically for pool tables, with five glass shades offered in a wide range of colors.

COUTURE INTERIORS

BY ROGER GRODY

AFTER WORKING AS A PAINTER, ACTOR, FASHION DESIGNER, AND BUILDER, INTERIOR DESIGNER BRADLEY BAYOU BRINGS A WEALTH OF CREATIVE EXPERIENCE TO HIS PROJECTS.

Bicoastal entrepreneur Bradley Bayou first became interested in the practice of interior design while working as a developer, and recalls feeling envious of the architects he collaborated with, including heavyweights like Richard Meier and the visionary Miami firm Arquitectonica. A truly multifaceted talent, Bayou worked as an artist in New York, and later as an actor in Los Angeles. He then impulsively jumped into fashion design, inspired by an episode of the MTV show House of Style in 1989, in which host Cindy Crawford was presenting current trends in vests.

Bayou hand-painted a vest and wore it to a black tie event where everybody went wild over it, quickly leading to an order from exclusive L.A. boutique Fred Segal. The native Texan subsequently sold his vests to Neiman Marcus, then Saks Fifth Avenue and Barneys. "One day Neiman Marcus called to tell me my vests were flying off the shelves and said, 'We want to see your entire spring collection,'" recounts a stunned Bayou who was suddenly a fashion industry trendsetter.

Bayou's eponymous couture line was favored by celebrities like Oprah Winfrey, Beyoncé and Anne Hathaway during its decade-long run. He was later appointed creative director at Halston in an effort to revitalize the brand, launched a ready-to-wear line with QVC and became a best-selling author with his book The Science of Sexy.

Ultimately, Bayou grew restless with fashion design and was drawn to interiors because of his experience as a builder and success in designing homes for friends. The transition to interior design was surprisingly seamless, as it drew upon skills acquired in his previous careers. "I was a real estate developer so I understood construction, and fashion taught me a sense of balance, colors and textures," he explains. After working in the high-stress world of fashion design, no budget, deadline or demanding client was going to intimidate Bayou.

Describing his signature style as "World Modern," Bayou clearly has an affinity for Mid-Century Modern, but does things his own way. "I can put Asian, African and Italian, 18th century to 21st century, all in the same room as long as it's balanced and they all work together," states the designer. Bayou also has a keen appreciation for bringing the outside environment in, and is fond of saying, "The surroundings are just as important as the interior space."

Bayou blurs the line between indoors and out.

Bayou channels Mid-Century Modernism in the “Bird Streets” above L.A.

Not even private spaces are insulated from nature.

Rustic natural materials complement modern aesthetics.

Bayou-designed living room in a Chelsea penthouse.

"I want your eye to go out toward the view, whether it's Manhattan or the Hollywood Hills," says Bayou, who adds, "The view is worth more than the art-work inside, so the eyes should flow in that direction." The veteran designer observes little difference between his New York and L.A. clients, emphasizing that while the cities are dramatically different in terms of their built environments and attitudes, all of his clients appreciate what he brings to the table. "They're buying the Bradley Bayou aesthetic," says the self-assured designer.

At a full-floor penthouse at Walker Tower in Manhattan's Chelsea neighborhood, Bayou's client required some convincing that this view-centric philosophy was appropriate. "He had a lot of brightly colored furniture and Persian rugs, which I made him get rid of," recalls Bayou. "I said to him, 'Look at all the color outside ... the view features gorgeous taupes, pinks and greys, but your eye is drawn to that bright blue chair.'"

Reimagining the 7,200-square-foot penthouse, which includes two spacious terraces, Bayou created spaces that incorporate the colors from the cityscape to maximize the home's original Art Deco grandeur and panoramic views. The expansive great room was divided into three seating areas that feature a stunning coffee table of Bayou's own design, a Minotti sectional, LaVerne coffee table, and sofas from the line launched by prominent Mid-Century Modernist Angelo Donghia. The formal dining room flaunts a sleek table and custom lighting fixture — a galaxy of starbursts so striking it almost distracts from the Manhattan skyline view — from the handcrafted luxury collection of Jean de Merry, as well as Bayou's original art.

Bayou is at a point in his career where he does not feel compelled to compromise his artistic expression, explaining that unlike many of his peers, he designs because of his passion for creation, not because he needs the fee to make a mortgage payment. "A lot of designers tell their clients what they want to hear, but I tell them the truth," says Bayou, who in return expects to be granted full creative license. "Generally, these are very powerful people who don't like losing control, but eventually they understand and defer to my judgement," he explains. The designer proudly reports he never misses a deadline and completes every project under budget.

The presence of Bayou-designed furniture and accessories in the Walker Tower penthouse is not an anomaly for the designer, who has been incorporating his own custom pieces for decades. In the coming months, Bayou will be launching an entire line of furniture, but has begun with an international pillow collection, available on his website. "I had a difficult time finding pillows for clients and had to make my own out of necessity," he explains, noting his expertise as a fashion designer exposed him to fabrics from all over the world. A line of unique Japanese-inspired pillows are crafted from vintage sake filters, while his African designs feature antique hand-beading sourced from West African artisans.

A house Bayou built in the Bird Streets of L.A. is another outstanding example of his World Modern style. Perched in the hills above the Sunset Strip — the neighborhood's moniker refers to streets with names like Blue Jay Way and Mockingbird Place — this neighborhood has become a showplace for modern architecture and Bayou's house fits right in. Responsible for nearly every square inch of the glass-and-concrete house, inside and out, Bayou reports, "I wanted the home to blend into the hills and exist in harmony with the environment."

Retractable glass walls enhance the residence's indoor/outdoor lifestyle, while an infinity pool (de rigueur for the Hollywood Hills) creates a sense of drama from a living room anchored by a quartzite-and-limestone fireplace. The harmony with the outdoors is particularly evident in a master suite that features a textured bronze-tiled fireplace and spa bath with custom sunken tub and heated floors. The suite's glass walls open onto a private Zen garden with a koi pond and yoga deck. The house is filled with world-class art, but the city and hillside views command your attention in every room.

Most designers love to talk about a particular material, product or lighting designer they are currently obsessed with and are incorporating into multiple projects, but Bayou insists he is not one to repeat himself. "I'm constantly looking for what's new and exciting. I've done a hundred bathrooms but have never repeated a design, rarely even a lighting fixture." Therefore, he is always seeking out emerging new talent — sometimes discovered far from cosmopolitan cities — whose work can be showcased in his designs.

"It has to be interesting and new just like in the fashion world, where every few months I had to come up with an entirely new collection," explains Bayou. "That's what keeps me interested, passionate and motivated to do the best job for my clients."

ALL THE RIGHT MOVES

A PRIZED OHIO ESTATE SCORES WITH EXCEPTIONAL AMENITIES AND PRIVACY

BY ZACHARY CHASE

He stares down his opponent. Dribble. Dribble. Dribble. Gives a fake to the left, moves right, and ... swish.

The crowd goes crazy. The "crowd" of friends and family who have gathered in Delaware, Ohio, to watch this exciting one-on-one matchup from the private viewing area of the decked-out, indoor basketball half-court on West Orange Road, that is.

The basketball court is the type of amenity that defines and distinguishes some of today's most impressive custom estates, showcasing the ultimate in luxury and lifestyle potential. And it's just one of the distinctive features found at this exceptional residence.

"This contemporary gated home is very aesthetically pleasing, built with incredible quality, and is so unique. The main home features a movie theater with custom-built surround sound and recliner seating, and the half-court basketball gym and generously sized home gym are incredibly opportune for any luxury home buyer," says listing agent Alma Lovins of Coldwell Banker King Thompson

New Albany/Gahanna, of the five-bedroom, five-full-and one-half-bath, 9,922-square-foot residence. “With the amazing recreational facilities, I absolutely could see a professional athlete being interested in the property, but I could also see a family with children who value sports. Someone equally interested in music could fall in love with the property, thanks to the recording studio, along with a fully equipped kitchen and oversized attached garage, featured in the separate guesthouse.”

That guesthouse also has a front porch that overlooks a private pond — just one of many surprises found outdoors on the two-acre, wooded and lushly landscaped property. “Any luxury homebuyer will enjoy the incredible backyard, which is perfect for entertaining and resort-style living, featuring an in-ground pool, a Zen water feature and an outside, grand entrance stairway,” she says.

The entertainment potential continues inside the home, with an array of highly desirable features, including an in-home movie theater, large gathering spaces that drink in the scenic views and provide immediate access to the outdoors, and a spacious bonus room with ample space for a billiards table and a large game-watching zone. The custom gourmet kitchen is yet another space that is ideal for both entertaining and family living and boasts an adjacent breakfast nook that inspires the feel of enjoying a meal in the wilderness, thanks to large windows on three sides.

“The gourmet kitchen is fully loaded with top-of-the-line appliances, a large island, custom cabinetry and a butler’s pantry,” she says. “An immense, 360-degree custom-built shower in the master bedroom and exquisite bathroom fixtures also bring the ‘wow’ factor.”

In fact, says Lovins, the entire estate was designed to captivate while providing the owners with every amenity they need in a preferred location that enjoys serenity, seclusion and access. “This home has been finished to perfection, with interior features showcasing contemporary architectural design, dramatic ceiling heights, and meticulous detail and customization at every angle,” she says. “The luxury buyer of this property will not only be buying a home that is as contemporary as the newer-built homes, but will have the exceptional sense of character and the spacious land that provides privacy, the sense of sanctuary and intimacy that many desire, as well as convenience to shopping, outdoor life, state parks and recreation, and highways for downtown access.”

The High Road

BY ALYSON PITARRE

A MODERN MOUNTAIN RETREAT OFFERS AN UNFORGETTABLE ENTRÉE TO LAKE TAHOE'S NORTHSTAR.

There are two kinds of homes in Lake Tahoe, according to Mike Beallo: the view home and the home with ski-in, ski-out access. It is a rare mountain residence that ties both together. Yet that is exactly what he has achieved with his latest creation in Mountainside — an exclusive enclave of 25 properties with privileged access to the Ritz-Carlton and its luxurious amenities. The property's location off Timberline Trail leads directly to Northstar California Resort and places you in the path of a breath-stealing view reaching through the pines and across the Sierra Nevada mountains to Castle Peak.

"You can find lots of properties in Tahoe with a view, but no access," explains Beallo, a longtime Lake Tahoe resident, who has listed the property with Christy Curtis of Coldwell Banker Residential Brokerage in Tahoe-Truckee. "Access to the mountain is what made me enthusiastic about this property. It's the best ski-in, ski-out access I've experienced in the world."

Beallo purchased the Mountainside lot in 2013 and quickly began creating his vision with Scott Gillespie, principal of Truckee-based Sandbox Studio. He formed an instant rapport with Gillespie, a former freestyle skier, who shared his affection for snow country and understood the nuances of alpine construction. Their visions aligned without so much as a word: Gillespie framed the architecture around the view, siting the house both to control solar exposure and focus the views to the north so they were front-facing.

"The house is designed so that every room gets a view — even the bathrooms," says Gillespie.

The view and natural surroundings drove most design decisions. For example, you are introduced to the 6,299-square-foot home with a dare: cross a bridge over a stream and prepare to be awed. From the beginning, you come to face-to-face with a jaw-dropping panorama as the foyer leads you into the great room with 20-foot ceilings, floor-to-ceiling glass, clerestory windows and sliding-glass door walls spilling out to the large entertaining deck.

Gillespie positioned the windows “to take advantage of the sunlight as it changes throughout the day,” and strategically placed multiple decks off different rooms of the house to provide a clear “indoor/outdoor connection,” he says.

A three-story staircase punctuated by large picture windows overlooks a stream that flows from the front of the home, underneath the entry bridge, and dives down under the master suite to the rear of the house near the deck in a dramatic finale. The stream also has a functional aspect, says Beallo — so “when it snows a lot, you have room for the snow to pass underneath the house.”

While Beallo gave Gillespie design freedom, he was also a highly engaged client who came with a few must-haves: contemporary architecture and an open floor plan, with the main living areas positioned on one level.

“The traditional Tahoe home has many steps, since most homes are sited on hillsides and require the creation of multiple stories to get square footage,” says Beallo. “So, often, you won’t have the main public spaces on the same floor. But that’s not what buyers are looking for — they want one large open space where family and friends can be together.”

In that regard, Gillespie delivered. His interpretation of a contemporary mountain chalet resulted in a rich palette of reclaimed barn wood, exposed steel and locally sourced stone, with a refreshingly open concept designed to promote socializing. The great room, flanked by a massive fireplace lined in native Sierra stone quarried from Donner Summit, includes a voluminous living area, kitchen and dining area that flow together. A large media room, wine room, master suite and guest master suite are also located on this level, providing an additional sense of connection. Upstairs, there is a kids’ bunk room and two other guest suites. Downstairs, Gillespie and Beallo drew on their experience as slopeside dwellers to create an ingenious ski cave for storing gear and lounging.

“You can grab your gear in the morning and head outside to the trail right from the back porch,” says Gillespie. “When you’re ready to take a break, you can easily come back to this space, pop off your gear, grab a beer from the fridge, turn on the game and warm yourself by the fireplace. We thought a lot about how people like to use their homes up here, and we made sure to incorporate the expected ski town amenities.”

Curtis sums up the home’s allure best: “If you’re passionate about the mountain lifestyle, or skiing and snowboarding, then you’re going to love this location.”

THE LAST WORD IN...

THE BROWN LIQUOR CRAZE
HAS GONE GLOBAL,
WITH HIGH-END WHISKEYS
PRODUCED FROM TEXAS TO TAIWAN.

LIQUID GOLD

renowned for their smooth, nuanced flavor profiles and pair particularly well with food. In a blind tasting in 2012, a 25-year-old Yamazaki whiskey from Japan beat out 300 other single malts, including Scotland's most famous labels.

But Japan is hardly the most exotic whiskey-producing region, with Amrut distilled outside Bangalore, India and Kavalan from the Taiwanese countryside. And with centuries of Cognac experience, it is no surprise to see whiskeys from France, such as single malts from producers Bastille or Armorik. Kyle Swartz, managing editor of Beverage Dynamics magazine, reports, "The ever-curious palate of the U.S. consumer, especially millennials, is fueling an exploding interest in craft whiskeys from around the world," and suggests some brands from India, Korea, France, Israel, and South Africa rival those from top-tier producers Scotland, Canada and Ireland.

With craft distilling on a tear in America — mirroring what previously occurred in the beer industry — high-quality brown liquor is being produced across America. Notable distilleries include Westland in Seattle and Stranahan's in Denver, and there are enough in the Lone Star State to warrant "Distillery Trail" tours. Even the notoriously dry state of Utah is in play, with High West Distillery in Park City turning out Rendezvous Rye and American Prairie Bourbon.

Andrew Faulkner, vice president of the American Distilling Institute and managing editor of its Distiller Magazine, reports the number of craft distilleries in the U.S. doubles every five years and currently registers about 1,300. "Some craft producers are playing catch-up, but some are absolutely world-class," he says, citing Northern California's Germain-Robin and St. George Spirits as among the best.

COURTESY BUFFALO TRACE DISTILLERY

While trendy tequilas and vodkas continue to flood the market, brown liquors are among the hottest spirits today, according to mixologists and collectors. The revered Scottish Highlands and Bourbon County, Kentucky are still dominant whiskey regions, but production has gone global with outstanding spirits distilled throughout Europe, the Far East, India, and eclectic domestic appellations like Tallahassee, Florida or Brooklyn, New York.

The prices of premium bottles of single malt Scotch have long rivaled those of fine Bordeaux, but now high-end, small-batch whiskey labels from America are in the same league. Among the most exclusive is Pappy Van Winkle Family Reserve 20-Year, which sells for $1,500-plus. Even Tennessee's Jack Daniel's, an iconic blue collar classic, now offers high-end single barrel select whiskeys in engraved bottles.

Connoisseurs and beverage directors in search of exceptional whiskeys are searching globally for new favorites and the products from Japan's distilleries are extremely fashionable in cosmopolitan watering holes. They are produced in the Scottish tradition but are
